Deloris soon helps her fellow sisters find their voices as she unexpectedly rediscovers her own.

Volunteers flock to successful recruitment fair in Omagh

BY VICTORIA HOUSDEN

A VOLUNTEER recruitment fair which took place at Omagh Library has highlighted the range of opportunities available across the local area, while linking 'those who want to help' with 'those that need help'.

The well-attended event saw more than 20 community and voluntary sector organisations in attendance, including Easilink, RNID, the Now Group, Special Olympics, Inspire stables, Home start, Foresight, and many more.

The fair was an ideal opportunity for the local community to find out more about the value of volunteering, in addition to the range of local opportunities available and ways to get involved.

Speaking about the event, Martin

Cassidy, volunteer coordinator at Omagh Volunteer Centre described the event as 'life-changing'.

"Volunteering really does change people's lives; both those who volunteer, and those who are helped by volunteers," he said. "It can help you gain new skills, meet new people, test the water for a career change, allow you to give something back, and help a cause you really believe in."

"Volunteering can be very flexible, and fit around other commitments."

"Some roles are regular, while others are more ad hoc. There really is something for everyone."

Martin Cassidy, volunteer co-ordinator at Omagh Volunteer Centre, was delighted to welcome new and existing volunteers to the centre's recent recruitment fair at Omagh Library.
